Russell pats Alice's rump, a gesture that strikes me as unusual. She is after all older than Max. "Off with you now. I want to have a look at Max's girlfriend."

Even the way he talks to her is unusual, as if she's still a little girl. My anxiety intensifies.

"She's nothing special, Dad," Alice retorts as she reluctantly slides off his lap.

"Jealousy doesn't become you, sweetheart. Come here, Gina, and let me have a look at you."

"Go on." Max prods me in the back.

I go around the large desk, which is cluttered with documents and bric-bracs, including a table photo of a little girl in pigtails whom I recognize as a childhood version of Alice. Surprise, surprise, she's actually smiling in her photo - something I haven't seen much evidence of since I arrived.

Russell is seated on his high-back leather chair, whose reclining back squeaks as he leans back to view me in all my party frock glory. He's a giant of a man, with long limbs and a waist that resembles Max's tapering one.

"Very, very pretty." He holds out his large hands. "Come here, Gina."

I'm not really sure what to do, but I do know that as a guest, I cannot rudely decline. But just gazing at this magnificent specimen of a man - a man in every sense - makes me go weak in my knees. More so than his sons, he gives off the impression of instant and absolute command. His eyes are crinkled at the edges with laugh lines and his skin is weathered. I suspect he is a man much used to being outdoors.

I take two tentative steps towards him. He reaches out and grasps my hand.

"Sit here, Gina." He pats his lap, recently warmed by Alice.

Alice hisses with exasperation.

I place my buttocks on his lap. My hands tremble a little. I can smell his aftershave - a musky scent that sends shivers through my body. His skin is very warm through his shirt and pants, and I am very aware of his overwhelming maleness, and of his hand on my back as I snuggle closer to his torso in a bid to maintain my balance.

He adjusts my body orientation so that I'm sitting partially sideways, with my legs dangling off his right thigh. The armrest prevents me from totally being sideways. His hand on my back slides up and down my bodice, stopping just above my buttocks. My skirt is flouncy and very much in the way of more contact.

My pulse is fluttering at my throat. I swallow a hard lump.

Max clears his throat and remarks, "Gina has very nicely agreed to submit - " he pauses at the significance of the word " - to the whole family."

Editorial Review

From the Author

When I wrote this book and designed its cover, the erotica world was going through some major changes. Adult Filtering began bigtime and this is one of my filtered (a.k.a. censored) books. This means that this book will not appear on my author page or be recommended to you via 'Also Boughts'. Nevertheless, it still managed to get into the Top 100 Erotica.
